Once upon a time, there was Socky, the little sock — green, red, and oh so small. One day, his pair disappeared, leaving him all alone in the drawer.

Patiently, Socky waited, but the other never returned.

One day, Socky gathered his courage and decided to set off on a grand adventure.

“Wherever my pair has gone, I’ll find that place and discover it!”

2

He arrived in the land of Twisted Forks,
where every fork had... unusual shapes.

They didn’t mind being different;
instead, they smiled and invented carnivals.

3

He then reached the land of Chipped Cups,
where each one had tumbled from somewhere.

But these cups, happy to be imperfect,
poured tea and played with little paper boats.

4

Next, he wandered into the land of Worn-Out Toothbrushes, where grown-ups and children had tossed them away.

But instead of feeling useless or sad,
they painted and painted — they were all artists!

5

Turning here and wandering there,
Socky finally arrived in a big city.

There were so many socks!

Bright, funny, and full of mischief.

None of them were looking for their missing pair
because being different had its own rewards.

6

The more colors, the more imagination —
the more friends along the way!

Socky exclaimed, “You know what?

I’ll stay here and never go back to the drawer!”

And that’s why, dear parents and children,
sometimes your socks disappear.

What happens next?

The mismatched world becomes a happier place!
